Product information, including uses/applications and source(s) of imports:

Palm fatty acid distillate (“PFAD”) is a naturally derived organic material used as a raw material to produce specialized-use animal feeds. The imported product is produced from palm oil by acid hydrolysis, followed by distillation to separate and recover the associated glycerine without fractionation of the palm fatty acids into their pure components.

PFAD is reacted with calcium oxide or hydroxide to make a calcium soap used in a specialized animal feed product. The fatty acids are broken down in the animal’s digestive system and absorbed in the small intestine and utilized by the cow to make milk fat or as an energy source. NutriScience is a domestic producer of a similar animal feed supplement end-product.

PFAD is imported from Malaysia and the Philippines, with lesser amounts coming from Indonesia, Germany, and occasionally other countries.
